With North Star releasing his new "Death in the Dark Continent" rule set, we wanted to see if it brought anything new to the table. For our first trial game, Steve and I tried a clash of two European forces: British and French. We went with the basic "Pitched Battle" scenario to be fought over a jungle outpost.

Death in the Dark Continent: First Game and Impressions

When I decided to write "Death in the Dark Continent", one of the biggest changes from my previous African set, "In the Heart of Africa", was the switch from singly based figures to larger multi-figure bases. There were several reasons for this: large armies were now easier to move about, and of course differences in troop types and fighting styles could now be incorporated, distinguished by varying numbers of figures of each base.
